Meadowvale

Community Profile

History

The seeds of Mississauga's dynamic growth were sown in the 1950s with the emergence of planned residential and industrial subdivisions. Whereas previous subdivisions were small, random collections of homes built on lots carved out of recently sold farmland, the new planned communities included residential, as well as commercial and industrial components.

Throughout the 1960s plans based on the "new town" concept of providing employment opportunities, homes, schools and recreation facilities within the integrated community abounded, but by far the most ambitious and elaborate scheme was introduced in 1968 after years of deliberation. The vast tract of agricultural land located in the northwest part of Mississauga was earmarked for development as "two contiguous planned communities that would form a community within a community". The southern community was known as Erin Mills. The northern community, called Meadowvale, covered over 3,000 acres, was the base of what is now Meadowvale Business Park and the Meadowvale Residential District.

The Meadowvale Residential District has been expanded numerous times over the years. Cadillac Fairview Corporation extended the area to Tenth Line in the late seventies. In the late 1980s Erin Mills Development Corporation extended the northern limits of the residential district to the CPR tracks.

Today, Meadowvale is a relatively established residential community which is representative of planning philosophies of the sixties and seventies.

Table 3 - Population by Ethnic Origin (Single Responses)

Ethnic origin refers to the ethnic or cultural origins of a person's ancestors. An ancestor is someone from whom a person is descended and is usually more distant than a grandparent. It is not the same as place of birth, citizenship or nationality. People who responded to more than one category were counted as multiple responses.
